THIS STATE SECOND IN UNION IN VALUE OF TOBACCO CROP

Only Kentucky Surpasses It—Reported Chinese Demand For Weed Thought to Have Something to Do With High Prices It Has Been Commanding.

(By BION H. BUTLER.)
Raeferd, Nov. 15.—Has North Carolina gone wild over tobacco? It looks that way in some sections of the State. Yes, if the case is examined it may show some conditions that have not been suspected, and which will indicate a progressive and enthusiastic sanity along many lines rather than any particular craze. It is a fact that tobacco has excited a great deal of interest during the passing season, and that it has been a good crop with a good price, and that a lot of people are contemplating a tobacco crop next year. Of the experiences of farmers all over the tobacco sections of the State, as well as by individual experimenters in new regions. For instance, there is the Pumpelly farm at Samarand. Mr. Pumpelly tried five acres to tobacco as an experiment. It produced a good yield, a good quality and a good price. That five acres is the forerunner of about a hundred acres of tobacco next year. In any useful line, tobacco is of very little value. Its sole place is as a sedative, and therefore it can be tolerated by the individual who uses it he must undergo an unpleasant education in its toleration. Then it becomes almost essential to his comfort. On this unattractive tobacco has become one of the important cultural and commercial products of the world, comparing in this respect with opium, although opium has marked virtues, and occupies an important place among the prominent drugs in constant medical and surgical practice. North Carolina was early among the prominent tobacco colonies of the United States and has been prominent continuously. Of late years the bright smoking tobacco of the State has been a particularly favored product, and it is this variety that appears to be making the hit in the tobacco trade now. Second in tobacco, sandy section of the State for tobacco, and it is in the sand that North Carolina is running crazy over tobacco if it is running crazy at all. The five interesting features of this tobacco craze is in its extension in the sandy country. In the counties farther north and west the production of tobacco is more definitely fixed, and as that section has no other crop to which it can turn so quickly as the southern counties can turn to cotton, it may be assumed that tobacco is more permanent in the north of the State. But one reason for the spread of tobacco culture into the new belt section was the low price of cotton a few years ago, when some venturesome spirits had recourse to tobacco. The liberal use of fertilizer that had been practiced with cotton brought satisfactory profits from tobacco, and with the better prices of cotton many planters continued to stay with tobacco. The extension of the frontier encroached on cotton, and instead of the return of good prices for cotton proving disastrous to tobacco it seems that tobacco also continues to bring good prices and the tobacco men are pushing still farther into the sand. It is now known that the sandy soil makes a type of tobacco quite different from the bright leaf of the heavier soils, the bright leaf of the sand country being higher in weight, milder in flavor, possibly brighter in color, and a favorite in the market. From a production of something over a million pounds, twenty years ago, ent localities, but it does not go to any extreme like tobacco. We do not find some counties making cotton suitable for only sheeting, or another county making cotton fit for hosiery only, or some section in any way marked from another except that the sea islands of the Carolinas and Georgia make the sea island cotton. But each section of the United States tobacco producing territory has its own peculiar varieties of tobacco, and each is used for a different purpose. The bright tobacco of the new belt of North Carolina comes as near being an all-round tobacco as any, for it is adapted for cigarette and cutplug smoking, for granulated smoking, for plug filler and wrapper. It is not much of a cigar tobacco. The remarkable growth of the consumption of North Carolina bright leaf since it first commenced to make itself popular soon after the war seems to show signs of continuing as the tobacco trade expands, as the bright leaf is a mild, fragrant tobacco with low nicotine content giving the smoker the flavors he desires without the offensiveness of the stronger varieties. It seems that this variety is confined to the State of North Carolina and an extension of the new belt in the Northeast of South Carolina. Yet tobacco experts say that the South Carolina tobacco does not fully stand up with that of North Carolina. Whether this is wholly justified may be open to debate, yet it is possible that the soil and climate peculiarities of South Carolina differ from those of North Carolina. It seems a fact

ROUNT TABOR.

BY JOHN HAY.

On Tabor's height a glory came,
And, shrouded in clouds of ambient flame,
The awe-struck, hushed disciples saw
Christ and the prophets of the law;
Moses, whose grand and awful face
Of Sinai's thunder bore the trace,
And wise Elias, in his eyes
The shade of Israel's prophetess,
Stood in that vast mysterious light
Than Syrian sunsets more purely bright,
One on each hand—so high between
Shone forth the God-like Nazarene.
They bowed their heads in holy fright,
So mortal eyes should bear the sight,
And when they looked again, behold!
The fiery clouds had backward rolled,
And borne aloft, in grandeur lonely,
Nothing was left "save Jesus only."
Resplendent type of things to be!
We read its mystery to-day
With clearer eyes than even they.
The fisher saint of Galilee,
We see the Christ stand out between
The ancient law and faith serene,
Spirit and letter both are Love;
Led by the hand of Jacob's God
Through wastes of old a path was trod
By which the savage world could move
Upward through law and faith to love.
And there in Tabor's hallowed dome
The crowning revelation came.
The old world sunk in homage due,
The prophets rose in reverence true,
Law ceased its mission to fulfil,
And love was lord on Tabor hill.
So now, while crowds perplex the mind
And wranglers lead the weary wind,
When all the air is filled with words
And texts that ring like clashing swords,
Still, as for refuge, we may turn
Where Tabor's shining glories burn—
The seat of antique Israel's gaze—
And nothing left but Christ alone.
—St. Peter.

MISCELLANY.

A Case of Absent-Mindedness.

Guineave Planché was poor, as literary gentlemen generally are. He subsisted on his poverty half through a social distemperance and half through a carelessness which came from his temperament, treating questions of interest with the disdain of a poet, and the simplicity of a child. The editor of the "Revue des Deux Mondes"

THE ROUNDWOOD GHOST.

At last I had an habitation of my own, an imposing red-brick structure, roomy enough to furnish homes for a full score of demure little mortals like myself.

"You will lose yourself in this great barn of a house," said Aunt Jerusha, who had accompanied me to Roundwood to be the ruling divinity of the marriage.

"It would not be much of a loss to the world in general if I should."

"Humph! I have no predilections for mistletoe bought at old oak chests. I want no such skeletons rising up to marter my rest."

"Trouble comes fast enough without borrowing it."

"At any rate, I've spoken my mind, and not without reason. It is doubtful if you have heard all that I have concerning your new possessions."

Aunt Jerusha looked so solemn that I quickly asked:

"What have you heard?"

"Roundwood has a ghost. You needn't laugh—it may prove to be no laughing matter. I got the story from the servants. Not a soul of them but is convinced the house is haunted."

"Tell me what they say."

"It is really quite dreadful, Madelon. They declare that Madam Belgrave can't rest quietly in her grave, but comes back to her old room night after night, and walks the floor all morning."

"Has anybody seen her?"

"No; but all of them have heard her pining up and down the apartment."

"Humph. The ghost must be laid. I don't like the idea of being disturbed at all hours of the night by any such uneasy people."

"Nor I," drily. "But who will do it?"

"I will," was my answer, as I caught a sunbeam from the wall, and darted out into the garden to engage Aunt Jerusha's solemn visage while I ruminated upon the ways and means.

However, the prim, old fashioned garden, with its quaint angular walks, and funny little beds, from which the flowers lifted bright and smiling faces, as if in welcome, soon drove all thoughts of the ghost from my head.

I wandered up and down the box-bordered paths, peeping into grape arbors, and summer houses, inhaling the balsamic odors in the air, and hugging to myself the delicious sense of possession until I grew quite jubilant. Of all my pleasures, that of proprietorship was the keenest just then. And poverty—and it is bitter to my palate. It seems delightful to be rid of the toll and an uneasy attendant on earning one's own living; I don't think I could take up the old burden again."

"I know you would like lotto-eating."

"Who doesn't, for that matter? Besides it has all the seal of a new sensation just now. I may tire of it—but that seems impossible."

"Not to me."

"Appropos of this inheritance of mine, I'll tell you what I am willing to do, Mr. Belgrave. I'll share it with you. He opened wide his eyes, as if suspicious his ears had played him false.

"Are you serious?"

"I never was more so."

Ah! conscience has begun to prick you already."

"Not a bit of it."

There was a slight pause, and then he said, with an amused smile: "And so you are anxious Roundwood should have a master as well as a mistress?"

"You know I do not mean that," I returned, blushing and speaking quite angrily. "This inheritance more than meets my inextricable notions—you have a sort of claim upon it—I am quite willing to make over the half to you. Indeed, an idea of that sort has been in my head all along."

"This is Quixotic."

"No, it is making two people happy and comfortable instead of one."

"But I refuse to be made happy and comfortable at your expense. If Madame Belgrave had wished me to share her property, she would have left some document expressing the desire."

"Perhaps there is a will that has not come to light," said I, laughingly.

"He gave a quick start, and changed color.

"It can't help thinking so, but is a delusive hope, I fear."

"You are entirely too anxious to consign me to obscurity and school keeping again."

"No, you should never go back to that dreary life."

He stopped suddenly, heaited a moment, then held out his hand.

"Really, I feel like an intruder here, Miss Lane. I'd better say good morning and leave you, before I am betrayed into any further folly."

He turned abruptly away. "Did you know there was a ghost of Roundwood?" I called after him.

"No," looking back.

"No," said Madame Belgrave—a sure indication that she is displeased with something—probably the unjust disspattered and went out, presently, but I still sat there quite oblivious to the fact, thinking only of my loneliness and the treadmill of poverty to which I must return. At last I was aroused by a rustling sound, and a muffled step on the balcony without. With a sudden thrill of horror I beheld a dark figure rise up before the window, and slide noiselessly over the sill. The next instant a dark lantern flashed its light over the room. I started to my feet with a shriek of uncontrollable terror; in an attempt to rush to the door, my limbs failed utterly, and I crouched pale and panting against the wall.

"Miss Lane! you here!" said a voice, and the man put down the lantern and came toward me. "I beg a thousand pardons for giving you such a start."

It was Lawrence. I rose up again, thoroughly ashamed of myself for having manifested such extreme terror.

"My emotion was excusable," said I, with all the old sanctimoniousness for I had grown bold as a lion again, now there was no real horror to confront. "I did not expect to see you at Roundwood to-night—hence my surprise."

"The fact is," he replied, manifesting considerable confusion, "I have come here every night for two weeks back, hunting for Madame Belgrave's will. Lawyer Green has told me she destroyed it afterward as it has not come to light. I hold to a different opinion. The will was in my favor as you most readily guess, and I believe it is hidden in some place which Madame was prevented from disclosing by the awful suddenness of her death."

"Then you were the ghost?" I gasped.

"I suppose I must have been."

"Well, it is laid forever. You have no further need to haunt this apartment. Here is the missing document for which you have been searching; to-morrow I will abdicate as gracefully as possible, and Richard shall have his own again."

And while he stood staring at me, as if quite dumbfounded, I pushed the will into his hand, and made a second effort to gain the door.

"This time it was Lawrence who detained me forcibly."

"Don't go, Madelon," he whispered, his arm gathering me close to his side.

"Now I can speak my mind freely. I'll not be master here unless you consent to be mistress, for I love you too dearly. What say you?"

"I will not repeat my answer. But if Aunt Jerusha had hurried to my rescue—as she declared she would do—a few minutes after I first shrieked for assistance, the result would have been

Russian Romance.

Russia has not, it appears, escaped the epidemic of scandal in high life, which seems lately to have been making a tour of the world. A great trial has just been brought to a close at St. Petersburg which throws much new light upon Russian character and society. Even in these days of enlightenment it is astonishing how little is known of Russia, its social customs and events, beyond the frontiers of the Czar's territory. The trial of the Abbess Mitrofanova, reveals, especially, a degree of religious fanaticism hardly suspected. Her conviction for a series of forgeries which, for their long duration and impunity and vast extent, can scarcely find a parallel in the records of criminal audacity, has been attended by the unfolding of a tale so startling and sensational as it is unprecedented. The Abbess, it seems, is a lady of patrician blood. The daughter of Baron Rosen, formerly Commander-in-Chief in the Caucasus, her first appearance in public was as a lady of honor to the Empress of Russia. Impressed, probably, by the Czarina's own religious zeal, Baroness Rosen soon resolved to devote her life to the service of the Church. Brilliant, full of energy, enthusiastic to fanaticism, she attracted the attention of the venerable and beloved Philaret, Patriarch of Moscow. He induced her to become the abbess of a convent; and soon after she herself, using her influence at the Imperial Court, founded a new order of Sisters of Mercy at Moscow, with branches at St. Petersburg and Pskoff. Into this society she entered with a vigor and persistency which were amazing. Her great need was money; to procure this she employed methods at first ennobling, then criminal. An especial favorite at Court, she procured offices and titles for rich and ambitious merchants, who in return contributed liberally to her order. Sometimes she borrowed large sums and refused to return them. Sometimes she enjoined merchants to lend her their names on blank promissory notes, which she filled up at will, she employed her crafty artifices and carried them out with such consummate skill as to stamp her as a woman of remarkable intellect and resolution. But a time came when artifice could no longer avail her, when she had exhausted her credit with the merchants, and her schemes to secure funds by more stratagem. In her situation the Abbess was drawn into the domain

- 1958 State Archivist H.G. Jones discusses a plan for microfilming early NC newspapers
- The State Archives, The State Library, Duke University, and the University of North Carolina CH developed a plan
- The Committee on the Conservation of Newspaper Resources of the North Carolina Library Association also supported the plan
- The General Assembly granted money to start a project for the 1959-1961 biennium

North Carolina Newspapers On Microfilm

The North Carolina newspapers listed below have been microfilmed and are available for positive printing. Brackets around dates indicate badly-broken runs.

Southern Citizen (Asheboro), [1836-1840; 1844], 1 reel.
Catawba Journal (Charlotte), 1824-1828, 1 reel.
Charlotte Journal, 1835-1851, 3 reels.
Miners' and Farmers' Journal (Charlotte), 1830-1835, 1 reel.

North Carolina Whig (Charlotte), 1852-1863, 2 reels.
Edenton Gazette, [1806-1822; 1827-1831], 2 reels
Cape Fear News (Fayetteville), 1915-1917, 1 reel.
Fayetteville Index, 1909-1917, 3 reels.

The Times (Greensboro), 1856-1861; 1868, 2 reels.
North Carolina Journal (Halifax), 1792-1810, 2 reels.
Hillsborough and Durham Recorder, 1820-1911, 11 reels.
Carolina Centinel (New Bern), [1818-1837], 3 reels.
New Bernian, 1843-1853, 1 reel.

Spectator (New Bern), 1828-1842, 3 reels.
State Gazette of North Carolina (New Bern and Edenton), [1787-1799], 2 reels.

Weekly News (New Bern), 1853-1854, 1 reel.
Morning Clarion (Oxford), 1876, 1 reel.

Raleigh Register, 1799-1886, 21 reels.
The Sentinel (Raleigh), 1865-1877, 15 reels.
Carolina Watchman (Salisbury), 1832-1868, 6 reels.

Old North State (Salisbury), 1866-1871, 1 reel.
Western Carolinian (Salisbury), 1820-1844, 4 reels.
Yadkin and Catawba Journal (Salisbury), [1828-1834], 1 reel.
North Carolina Argus (Wadesboro), [1848-1876], 2 reels.

Help!

The Department is making every effort to locate all known copies of early North Carolina newspapers. Libraries throughout the country are cooperating in this effort, but it is inevitable that there are files or single issues of these papers in private hands and in small libraries. These issues are not included in the published checklists of newspapers, and, therefore, are not known to the Department. All individuals and institutions having in their possession early North Carolina newspapers are urged to inform the State Archivist of the titles and dates. He will then determine if these issues are available elsewhere, and if not, he will make arrangements to have them microfilmed for inclusion in the master negative. The papers will be filmed and returned unharmed, and full credit for ownership will be noted on the film. The holder of such issues will thus assure the preservation of valuable historical information to the eternal appreciation of historians.

Guide to Newspapers on Microfilm in the North Carolina State Archives

Last updated October 2017

Please submit questions or corrections to Chris Meekins at 919-807-7333.

The North Carolina Newspaper Project, a joint effort of the North Carolina Division of Historical Resources and the State Library of North Carolina, is part of the United States Newspaper Program. Partial funding has been provided by the Office of Preservation, National Endowment for the Humanities.

PRESERVING OUR PAST

ENVIRONMENTAL DAMAGE

Even with proper storage, the acids in wood pulp papers will inevitably destroy the newspapers. This fact alone explains why it is so important to microfilm the state's newspapers before it is too late.

North Carolina Newspaper Project staff gathers newspapers from across the state and brings them to the N.C. Division of Archives & History for microfilming. After the papers are sorted and collated, they are pressed and stacked. Finally they are ready to be filmed.

NORMAL AGING

Projects in the last four years

- The Dunn Dispatch [Harnett County] 1914-1965: 49 reels
- The St. Paul's Review [Robeson County] 1934-2013: 30 reels
- The Mount Olive Tribune [Wayne County] 1906-1981: 65 reels (still microfilming – holdings through 2014 – more reels to add)

- Oxford Public Ledger [Granville County] 1947-1967 (scattered issues): 7 reels
- The Carolinian [Wake County] 2012-2016: 5 reels

Newspapers

This group consists of microfilm copies of newspapers that, for the most part, are no longer being published. Since 1959 more than 1,000 titles have been preserved. An ongoing joint project between the Division of Archives and Records and the Division of State Library is attempting to identify and catalog every existing newspaper published in North Carolina. Those meeting specific criteria are being microfilmed. Copies of film made by the North Carolina Newspaper Project will be available for use by researchers in the Microfilm Room. See the Guide to Newspapers on Microfilm in the State Archives or the State Library's website for more information.

Newspapers are fundamental research tools for all researchers, from elementary school students and casual readers to university faculty and professional genealogists. No other published source covers such a wide range of material and reaches so deeply into the communities in our state. They provide a wealth of data about the civic, political, cultural, and social events of the periods they document. Historic newspapers offer an intimate close-up view of the American past that few other sources can provide.

In 2009, the State Archives of North Carolina completed a project to digitize newspapers from its collection that were, up until that time, only available on microfilm. These materials include papers dating from 1752-1890s from cities like Edenton (1787-1801), Fayetteville (1789-1795), Hillsboro (1786), New Bern (1751-1804), Salisbury (1799-1898), and Wilmington (1765-1816) - a total of 23,483 digital images that are keyword searchable. The project was made possible by a LSTA grant provided by the State Library of North Carolina.
